So if kids don't need to diet, how can they stay a healthy weight? All kids can benefit from eating a balanced diet and getting plenty of physical activity.

Kids have a lot of choices when it comes to activity and exercise. Some like to play on sports teams or do group exercises. Others may prefer to be more casual, riding their bikes or playing ballgames at the park. Just helping your parents rake leaves in the garden or clean the house is a kind of physical activity, though not as much fun as something like swimming! And it's a good idea to cut down on activities that aren't very active — such as watching TV or playing computer games.

Kids can also try to eat a variety of healthy foods. A balanced diet means that you don't eat the same thing every day and that you eat a mix of foods from different food groups. These include:

- fruits and vegetables
- milk and dairy products
- meat, nuts, and other protein-rich foods
- grains, especially whole-grain foods, such as whole-grain breads and cereals

This kind of diet helps your body by giving it the right nutrients. For instance, protein helps build your muscles and other body structures. Calcium helps your growing bones. And you need vitamins and other nutrients to keep your body working as it should. Fiber prevents constipation and carbohydrates give you energy, just to name a few.

45. The best title for this reading passage is -----.

- a) What kids can do to stay a healthy weight

- b) kids can benefit from different range of physical activities to stay a healthy weight
- c) working in the garden and helping parents clean the house are not fun for kids
- d) watching TV and playing computer games help kids to gain weight

47. Paragraph two tries to suggest the following expression "-----".

- a) Don't be a couch potato
- b) No pain, no gain
- c) Seek knowledge from the cradle till death
- d) The key to success is hard work

48. The pronoun "it" in the last paragraph refers to -----.

49. A balanced diet includes -----.

50. The expression "plenty of" can be replaced by -----.
